Foreign investors primarily look for big and reputable developers when buying overseas property. The Chinese, for example, are known for doing much research about developers before even visiting a country. Truth be told, failing to do enough research can result in late completions, quality issues, or that the developer runs into financial problems.

This study analyses (eco)tourism in Malaysian national parks from different angles by asking different groups of tourists and experts about their opinions, experiences and needs. Results show that the increasing heterogeneity and number of visitors and their different needs can put a strain on the environmental integrity of conservation areas. This study makes recommendations to mitigate such strains and to further sustainable tourism. Michigan, like most of the states formed from the old Northwest, originated as a state of farmers, fishermen, and lumbermen and remained so until Detroit emerged as a major industrial center at the turn of the twentieth century. The growth of the automotive industry attracted new immigrants and new politics. Republican for most of its history, Michigan became a bipartisan state with political divisions: upper versus lower peninsula, agriculture versus industry, labor versus capital, developers versus ecologists, and conflicts between races. Lansing and its lobbyists and political action committees exemplify modern large-state politics. With double-digit unemployment and an enormous stake in cars, roads, and bridges, Michigan is acutely aware of its ties to the federal government. Two governors, G. Mennen Williams and George Romney, have contended for the presidency, and one representative, Gerald Ford, became president by legislative maneuver. A strong governorship, an independent and experienced bureaucracy, and a full-time legislature have created an activist, policy-directed state government that generally bears little resemblance to the laissez-faire leadership of Michigan's early years. Although this book provides much historical and geographical information, the primary focus remains Michigan's need to cope with its vacillating economy. The authors look at the state's regional, ethnic, racial, and socioeconomic diversity and show how these are affected by the forces of change. William P. Browne is a professor of political science at Central Michigan University. He is author of Private Interests, Public Policy, and American Agriculture. Kenneth VerBurg is a professor in theDepartment of Resource Development at Michigan State University. He serves as chairperson of the State Boundary Commission and is coauthor with Charles Press of American Politicians and Journalists and coauthor of the award-winning Sacred Cows and Hot Potatoes: Agrarian Myths in Agriculture Policy.
To discuss the provisions of the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act of 1991 (ISTEA) pertaining to Native Americans and other transportation-related issues, a conference, sponsored by the Transportation Research Board, was held at the Salish and Kootenai tribal owned Kwataqnuk Resort, Polson, Montana, May 4-6, 1993. More than 110 individuals participated in the conference. About half were Native Americans and the rest were representatives from the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Federal Highway Administration, and state departments of transportation. Those tribes in attendance mostly represented tribes located in central and northwest United States, California and Alaska. Limited financial resources to assist travel expenses of tribal representatives prevented more tribes from participating. This report contains summaries of the workshop discussions. These summaries provide valuable insights into Native American transportation concerns and the opportunities for tribes to improve their transportation activities. The Transportation Research Board (TRB) plans to continue to assist networking among those who participated in the conference through regular TRB committee activity and by working with the new Indian Local Technical Assistance Program (LTAP) Centers. TRB is also planning follow-up activities including the activation of a Sub-committee on Native American Transportation Issues and a program on Indian Transportation Issues at the 73rd TRB Annual Meeting (January 9-13, 1994). The workshop topics were as follows: Tribal transportation planning; Indian transportation training and education needs, including LTAP; Financing transportation programs designated for Indian tribes; Tourism of Indian lands and provision under the ISTEA Scenic Highway Program; Indian employment preference and Tribal Employment Rights Organization (TERO); Highway safety programs for Native Americans; Paratransit, rural public transportation, and aviation services for reservations; Preservation of Indian archeological and religious sites; Improving relationships between Indian tribes and Federal and State agencies responsible for roads and Indian lands; Transportation research needs and information dissemination; Improving process for managing Indian transportation programs; Developing a strategic plan for tribes to obtain the Indian related provisions under ISTEA; Possible changes that are needed in Indian provisions of ISTEA; and Special transportation problems of Native Americans that do not have reservations.

In July 2011, Rebecca Prince-Ruiz challenged herself to go plastic free for the whole month. Starting with a small group of people in the city of Perth, the Plastic Free July movement has grown into a 250-million strong community across 177 countries, empowering people to reduce single-use plastic consumption and create a cleaner future. This book explores how one of the world's leading environmental campaigns took off and shares lessons from its success. From narrating marine-debris research expeditions to tracking what actually happens to our waste to sharing insights from behavioral research, it speaks to the massive scale of the plastic waste problem and how we can tackle it together. Interweaving interviews from participants, activists, and experts, Plastic Free tells the inspiring story of how ordinary people have created change in their homes, communities, workplaces, schools, businesses, and beyond. It is easy to feel overwhelmed in the face of global environmental problems and wonder what difference our own actions could possibly make. Plastic Free offers hope for the future through the stories of those who have taken on what looked like an insurmountable challenge and succeeded in innovative and practical ways, one step—and one piece of plastic—at a time.
